uldn't take it?" asked Beckwith, frankly. Then he hastened to add, for appearance sake, "Of course, there are lawyers of ability, but it doesn't run in the line you need."

"Well?" asked Calden, after a few minutes' pause. Beckwith's apology seemed to him a weakness to be treated with tender silence.

"Or, I thought I'd make the matter plain. I must decline to act further in this affair." "I suppose you're right," said Calden, wearily; "but I should think even this rule might have its exceptions."

"The trouble is you've got one rule mind while I'm thinking of another. You think it's simply the rule that a lawyer must be told everything. The rule I deem important is that a lawyer must do his best for his client. You simply make that impossible."

"I've told you every last thing I've done from start to finish," Calden begun, only to be interrupted with: But you haven't told me all you

"What I haven't told you, if I haven't told all, isn't mine to tell," said Calden, coldly.

"Look here, Calden," exclaimed Beckwith, shaping a last plea. "I'm fool enough to like you or I wouldn't be wasting time this way. You've got yourself to think of, and you can't begin the job any too quick."

"You think Trafford suspects me?" "If 'twas any other man but Trafford had the job I'd be surprised you're not already arrested."

"Well," replied Calden, his face pale but with no sign of fear that Beckwith could discover, "when he's ready let him arrest. I shan't deny the charge."

"What!" exclaimed Beckwith. "You surely won't admit it?" "I'll stand silent and put them to their proof." Beckwith eved him keenly for a mo ment and then said, sharply: "Mr. Calden, you know who committed that murder." If Beckwith had hoped to surprise Calden into admission he was disappointed. Not a muscle moved or eyelash quivered. His answer was as colorless as before: "Admit that I do. What difference does that make as long as it wasn't I?" "You should use the knowledge to

"As a layyer you know that my nee is presumed. It is my guilt that must be proved before I can be 'convicted."

"You owe something to justice." "I do," Calden agreed, solemnly, yet with a ring of eagerness in his voice And justice owed something to John Altenbury. Since he's dead one must assume the debt wholly paid."

Beckwith leaned his elbow on the antel and, with his head supported on his hand, seemed to study his comion's mood before speaking again. Then he said, slowly, and as if partly

"I sometimes think you hated him o that you could have killed him your-

"I wish to God I had!" exclaimed Calden, and there was that in his tone that gave even Beckwith a thrill. The latter took a turn up and down his office and then came back sharply to Calden.

C. R. Kluger, the Jeweler, 1060 Virginia Ave., Indianapolis, Ind., writes:
"I was so weak from kidney trouble that I could hardly walk a hundred feet. Four bottles of Foley's Kidney feet. Four bottles of Foley's Kidney Remedy cleared my complexion, cured my backache and the irregularities disappeared, and I can now attend to business every day, and recommend Foley's Kidney Remedy to all sufferers, as it cured me after the doctors and other remedies had failed."
